ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

There is increasing evidence that boys and girls differ in the development, expression and consequences of aggressive behavior toward others, as well as themselves. In this conference, three leading experts in the field of aggression (Drs. Jim Larson, Debra Pepler and Donald Meichenbaum) will address these developmental challenges. In both a conference presentation and accompanying workshops, they will examine how aggressive behavior toward others and self develops, highlighting gender differences. They will demonstrate how to conduct evidence-based, gender-sensitive interventions. They will discuss how educators, clinicians, social workers and other members of the community (primary care doctors, police and probation officers, parents and foster parents, religious personnel) can work together to prevent violence and to treat youth who show evidence of aggressive behavior. Leonard Pitts, award-winning syndicated newspaper columnist and member of The Melissa Institute's Honorary Board, will give the keynote address.

TARGET AUDIENCE

Educators, guidance counselors, psychologists, social workers, mental health workers, marriage and family therapists, social agency personnel, judges, law enforcement personnel, pediatricians, primary care physicians and psychiatrists.

OBJECTIVES

As a result of attending this conference, participants should be better able to:

- Recognize gender differences in the development of aggressive and self-injurious behaviors;
- Conduct evidence-based, gender-sensitive interventions;
- Assess for suicidality and provide interventions to treat childhood depression;
- Implement universal, indicated and selected interventions at multiple levels to prevent aggressive behavior.

MEETING THE CHALLENGE: CONSIDERING SOME FACTS

Aggression toward others

- A recent survey indicated that half of teens interviewed reported schools as being unsafe.
- Up to 10% of school-age children show evidence of clinically significant aggressive behaviors, with boys outnumbering girls approximately 3 to 1.
- Chronically aggressive youth drop out or are pushed out of school into lives of crime and substance abuse in the community.
- Boys and girls differ in terms of the form, developmental course, co-morbidity and correlates of aggressive behavior.
- Incidents of physically aggressive behavior among girls have risen dramatically over the decade.
- Childhood aggression is a risk factor for subsequent difficulties.

Childhood depression and youth suicide

- 10% of children experience clinical depression before the age of 14.
- 20% of adolescents experience a clinical depression before they graduate from high school.
- Each year, 8% of high school students in the U.S. attempt suicide.
- 13 of every 100,000 American adolescents ages 15 through 19 commit suicide.
- After the first bout of depression, 50% of students will have at least one and often repeated recurrences in their lifetimes.
- The younger the child is when depression first occurs, the greater the likelihood it will recur.
- Girls attempt suicide three times more often than boys and are more likely to have co-morbid disorders than boys, but boys commit suicide five times more frequently than girls.
